

Do you agree or disagree with the idea that Japanese school should start a year in September?

I agree with the idea that Japanese school should start a year in September for several reasons.

The biggest reason is that this policy will make it easier for students to study abroad. For example, students who studied in US for a year would have troubles with catching up the study when they come back to Japanese school. This is because schools in US begin a year in September. Furthermore, not only US but also lots of other countries in the world also have the same school system.

Another reason is that students can take university entering exams avoiding cold winter. It is good for them because of the culm weather. For instance, sometimes snows stop the public transportations and prevent students go to the test centers. It is unfair that some students cannot take tests because of the bad weather.

That is why I believe that Japanese school should start a year in September for several reasons.
